0-25	Tour of UCLA Lab	Tour a UCLA science lab studying Nature's ultimate flying machine! Mark Frye, parent of Oliver in Mrs. Schaffer's kindergarten, and professor studying how the fruit fly brain processes information from different sensory modalities. He studies fruit flies because although their brain is the size of a poppy seed, they process information in much the same way as we humans (but much faster!). The lab merges techniques from biology and engineering, using genetic mutant animals and electronic "virtual reality" arenas that simulate natural walking and flying behavior - like video games for flies. This is like a nature show on steroids! The winning bid will be provided a hands-on tour of the laboratory, to see the various high-tech gizmos we use to study visual and olfactory sensory behavior (the kids will love this). You will have a chance to look at flies through a microscope, see some great movies of flies flying, and afterward we will take a stroll across the lovely UCLA campus to get a cup of coffee (and a snack for the little ones), paid by Dr. Frye. The Physiology program at UCLA is ranked in the top 5 world-wide. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to see how science is really done at an internationally recognized university research laboratory. The tour schedule is flexible, but would generally occur between during business hours. If you're able, plan for two hours on campus, roughly one hour in the lab and one hour for a campus stroll, time permitting. Maximum of 5 people total for tour.
